Ablative paint is good for slower boats that are in constant use, such as fishing boats or pontoon boats. Ablative paint wears away on its own, which prevents you from having to remove the paint later on. Hard bottom paint is ideal for fast boats or boats that may not be used as often, such as speed boats.

Efforts to ban antifouling paints containing Tributyltin (TBT) began in the late 1980s when TBT became a restricted-use pesticide that could only be used on boats of aluminum construction and boats over 82ft in length. Although it still may be available in some parts of the world, antifouling paints containing TBT were ultimately banned in 2008.
